Re: Operating records of Hometown Pizza (W.D. Mich. Case No. 1:26-bk-03071)

Dear Laura J. Genovich,

When a company closes, its servers, cloud accounts and file boxes are usually abandoned or shredded. Those records are often worth more than the furniture.

I connect you with qualified buyers for the purchase of a closed company's records: order, production, shipping, project and service history, plus email and shared drives. For Hometown Pizza, that likely means the records in its accounting, operations and email systems. AI developers license records like these to train and test models. Comparable archives have sold for $50K to $500K+, which can add recovery for creditors.

For the estate it is simple. The estate approves what is included, personal information is removed before any use, and any sale or license goes to the court for approval like any other estate asset. I handle the inventory and the bidding.

Timing matters: hosted systems usually delete everything soon after billing stops. If Hometown Pizza or another estate on your desk still has records, a 15 minute call would tell us whether they are worth selling.

Email me at chad@ambaum.com with a good time to talk, or check a box below and mail it back.

Sincerely,

Chad Fisher

AMBAUM · FOR YOUR FILE

A closed company's records still have value

What buyers pay for, what never leaves the estate, and what to do before the systems go dark.

$50K to $500K+

Paid for comparable archives of operating records. Every sale or license is approved by the court, like any other estate asset.

What counts

The operating history buyers license

- ✓ Order and invoice history
- ✓ Production and quality logs
- ✓ Shipping and dispatch records
- ✓ Service and support tickets
- ✓ Project files and estimates
- ✓ Email and shared drives

What stays out

Removed before any use

- ✕ Customer names, addresses and phone numbers
- ✕ Employee files and Social Security numbers
- ✕ Patient and health information
- ✕ Bank and payment card numbers

The estate approves what is included.

Before systems are shut off

1. Note where records live: ERP, accounting, Microsoft 365 or Google, dispatch, shared drives.
2. Watch the billing: hosted systems usually delete records soon after billing stops.
3. Call first: before anything is abandoned, wiped or shredded.

What leaves the estate, and what doesn't

The work itself (the problem, the fix, the parts, the time) is what has value. Illustrative sample, not from a real company.
